

Family & Child Life Master's Program

The family and child life degree includes an advanced interdisciplinary study of interpersonal and family relationships. The graduate program has a strong emphasis on community involvement, practical application, and research. Graduates are prepared for advanced career opportunities in children's hospitals, family social service agencies, parent education programs, family counseling centers, and other family life education settings or doctoral study in family relations

Students with a master's degree in Family & Child Life will be able to:

- 1) Conceptualize and design family research related to their area of interest.
- 2) Critically evaluate contemporary empirical literature.
- 3) Interact and communicate effectively with families and other professionals.
- 4) Demonstrate effective oral and written communication.
- 5) Analyze quantitative data and interpret output from statistical analyses.

What is unique about the Family & Child Life graduate program at CWU?

- All Family and Child Life Master's students complete a multi-term practicum or internship experience in an agency suited to their particular professional goals. Students pursuing child life certification can complete this requirement in a child life internship in a children's hospital.
- All students design and conduct a research study specific to their area of interest. Students have the opportunity to present their findings at a University sponsored research symposium as well as a regional professional conference.
- Students have the flexibility to choose a capstone project that best meets their professional goals. Students will work with an advisor to decide whether to complete a thesis research project, an alternative project, or a comprehensive examination.
- Limited teaching assistantships are available. Assistantships provide tuition support and a stipend in exchange for students serving as instructors and advisors in the family and child life undergraduate program.
