TIPS FOR CONFLICT CONVERSATIONS

Before the conversation:

- Check your mindset. Are you able to approach the situation in a positive manner?
- Consider what you hope to accomplish.
- Consider the other person's perspective and how he or she may react.
- Set the stage. Make sure there is enough time to address the situation, meet in a neutral place (if possible), and remember to bring any materials you think will be useful.

During the conversation:

- Set ground rules. Agree to treat each other respectfully, listen, and attempt to understand other points of view.
- Agree conflict exists. One of the first steps to solving conflict is to agree it exists. Try to speak in terms of "we" instead of "you" to avoid making it seem personal.
- Express the problem Allow the other person to express his or her view of the conflict or problem without interruption.
- Acknowledge the other person's perspective Consider what's been said before moving on. Paraphrase what you heard so the other person can validate it.
- Identify the source Is the problem interpersonal or does it involve a task, process, or role clarity?
- Focus on work issues How does the problem affect work and how will fixing it help the organization? Seek common ground.
- Explore approaches Discuss various ways you could handle the situation.
- Agree on a solution and follow up After agreeing on a solution or agreeing to further analysis of potential solutions, set a follow-up meeting.
- Thank others for listening and for partnering to resolve conflict.
