ACCEPTANCE CRITERIA

Acceptance into the EMS Paramedicine Program is dependent upon successfully satisfying all entry requirements and receiving preferred status by the Selection Committee. (Please note: Admission to Central Washington University does not assure acceptance into the EMS Paramedicine Program). This section describes the selection process and the criteria that contribute toward a preferred status. The Selection Committee will examine the credentials of each applicant for the following:

- A GPA above 2.0 for consideration. GPA's above 3.0 are highly regarded and contribute significantly toward a preferred status.
- A minimum of three to five letters of recommendation. Applicants must provide at least three letters of recommendation for acceptance into the Program, preferably from paramedics. Letters from emergency medicine physicians or nurses are also useful, but letters from fire chiefs, teachers, clergymen, or family members carry less weight for preferred status.

- Adequate EMT experience. All paramedics are also EMTs and EMT skills are critical to successful practices as a paramedic. Although not as important as other criteria in generating a preferred status as a candidate, having a diverse and meaningful experience as an EMT in an emergency EMS agency working with paramedics has value. The state requires that all paramedic program applicants have one year experience as an EMT at a minimum. The Program prefers that applicants also have a call volume of 200 calls to establish EMS experience. A call log testifying to that experience is very helpful and should include the agency name, the date, the nature of the call, and any other relevant information.
- Demonstration of preferred traits and qualities during the formal interview process to the satisfaction of the Selection Committee. The interview provides the Selection Committee with a means of exploring thought processes, priorities, ideals, critical thinking skills, decision-making skills, composure, and other relevant qualities that are important to the profession of paramedicine.

Selection into the Program (and invitations to participate in the Program) is based upon the criteria above. The Program typically establishes a wait list of five candidates in the event a selected candidate elects to withdraw. All notifications will occur via regular mail services as individual candidates are selected. Participation in the Program is contingent upon each candidate meeting all entrance requirements listed in the “Student Requirements for Participation Packet” by the deadline dates set forth by the Program. The Packet will be mailed with the notification letters. Entry into the Program is contingent upon favorable outcomes of criminal background checks, toxicology screening, health assessments, and fulfillment of immunization requirements. Portions of these requirements are deferred to the fall quarter to enable a full academic year of coverage during clinical activity. More details on the dates for completion will be provided upon successful application processes for each candidate. Please contact the EMS Paramedicine Program directly for questions about the application or acceptance process. The admissions office will not be able to answer your questions. Please contact Emily Gonzalez, the Program Coordinator at emily.gonzalez3@cwu.edu or by phone at 509-963-1379.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF PROGRAM CHALLENGES AND ACADEMIC RIGOR

The paramedic education at Central Washington University is a monumental undertaking. The Program is one of only a few in the United States that awards a Bachelor of Science degree in the EMS discipline and is accredited by the Committee on Accreditation of EMS Education Programs. Also, the CWU EMS Paramedicine Program is likely the only one that has a two-year concentration in the major of Paramedicine. The depth and breadth of the curricular content is unparalleled and quite rigorous – a product of the lofty goals we set for our graduates.

Most applicants, providers of EMS, and other healthcare professions often fail to appreciate the sheer magnitude of time, energy, commitment and resources necessary to complete this Program. It is important that you fully understand what is expected of you and the level of dedication and motivation that is necessary to complete this endeavor. It will most likely be the greatest challenge you will ever face and, likewise, one of the greatest rewards you will experience.

In this particular Program, we emphasize not only cognitive and skill accomplishments, but also professional and behavioral development. As such, attitude and demeanor are extremely important. In this educational process, and in the profession as well, you will be interacting with other healthcare professionals, faculty members, families, professionals of other disciplines, and the general public. How you approach and interact with these individuals is, in large measure, how you will be regarded as an individual, as well as an ambassador of the EMS profession. Individuals that are aloof or arrogant, defiant or uncooperative, and challenging and disrespectful will often be met with disapproval and general disregard. Such behavior would be a discredit to you and to the profession and is not tolerated while a student in the Program.

To successfully complete this Program, you must be committed to the enormous amount of time this Program demands of you. Students frequently report studying every evening for three or more hours during the week and well in excess of eight on each day of the weekend. This is often what is necessary for most individuals to succeed in the Program. Given the time demands in this Program, it is strongly recommended that students do not take any other classes, do not participate in organized sporting activities, do not participate in ROTC activities, or expect to have significant time for social activities. It is also recommended that students live on or near campus during the academic year. While in the first academic year of this Program, your education should be the first and foremost priority.

Additional demands include accrued costs outside of tuition and lab fees. Members of the Paramedicine cohort are expected to meet specific pre-internship requirements in accordance with CWU's affiliation contracts with various clinical (hospital) and field (ambulance) agencies. These requirements are listed in the "Student Requirements for Participation Packet" and include such things as providing the Program Office with copies of negative background checks, drug screen results, 2-step PPD results, immunization documentation, health assessment from the CWU health center, malpractice insurance, current CPR certification for the Professional Responder, personal medical and automobile liability insurance, and so on. They must also subsidize their travel, lodging and food expenses, and finance the purchase of the necessary equipment and required uniforms. A cost estimate of the Program is provided to each accepted candidate at the Spring Orientation.

Much of the educational process in this Program depends upon you and your commitment to reading assignments in advance, studying lecture material, taking notes during class, reviewing your study information, and studying with others in small groups. There is a considerable expectation that you will be independent learner that will never fall behind. Absences from class and tardiness are a huge deterrent to performance. In addition, travel to ride sites and clinical sites are an integral part of this Program – you must have reliable transportation and assure your arrival to these clinical sites on time.

Academic performance is measured in three domains of education in this Program: Cognitive, Psychomotor, and Affective. Failure to maintain a satisfactory performance in any of these areas will result possible course failure and elimination from the Program. All courses must be completed with a letter grade of "B-" or better without exception. For each course in the EMS Paramedicine major in the first year, students must earn a 80% or better. This grade is calculated from prescribed components that are weighted (as detailed in each course syllabus) and the collective score determines the final grade. ONLY the final score is subject to mathematical rounding principles. Should a student earn a score below 80% in any course, that student will be dismissed from the Program. All psychomotor skill performances must meet established standards. Affective performances are measured in fourteen discipline-established parameters on an ongoing basis for each quarter.

In healthcare, we are all considered members of a larger medical team – all with the same goal: the patient’s well-being. No individual role in healthcare is more important than the others and all should be regarded with due respect and courtesy. Frequently through this Program, you will be a “guest” in the clinical or field environment of other healthcare professionals. At all times you should respect their role as provider, educator, and preceptor and be as accommodating as you reasonably can be.

These, and other demands and expectation, will likely challenge your participation and continuance in the CWU EMS Paramedicine Program throughout the academic years. It is important that you are fully aware of these and indicate your willingness to meet and overcome those challenges.

I, _____ have read this document, discussed it with my family and loved ones, and fully understand that participation in this Program will be challenging, rigorous, and a considerable commitment of my time and energy. Furthermore, I hereby affirm that I will make every reasonable effort to succeed in this Program and meet the expectations of the faculty, Program Director, and Medical Director to the best of my abilities.
