College in the High School

Dear Colleagues,

Thank you for your partnership with Central Washington University's College in the High School (CiHS) program. By offering college-level opportunities within the high school setting, you play a vital role in expanding access to higher education and helping students build confidence in their academic futures.

Many students face barriers when considering college, including financial concerns, uncertainty about the transition to higher education, and limited access to early college experiences. College in the High School helps address these challenges by allowing students to earn college credit while learning in a familiar and supportive environment.

Washington State's support for dual-credit programs has further expanded access for public high school students, making College in the High School an affordable and attainable option for more families. Students can begin earning college credits, explore academic interests, and reduce future educational costs while still in high school.

CWU CiHS provides meaningful benefits not only for students, but also for educators and school communities. Participating instructors engage in ongoing collaboration, mentorship, and professional development with university faculty, while school administrators and support staff help create pathways that promote student success and college readiness.

As Washington continues to prioritize college access and career pathways, CWU remains committed to providing high-quality dual-credit opportunities through our NACEP-accredited College in the High School program. We take great pride in serving students across the state and in supporting the educators and school teams who make this work possible.

We look forward to partnering with you as we help prepare the next generation of learners for success in college, career, and beyond. Please reach out to our team at any time with questions or for assistance.

With appreciation,

Angelia Riviera
